AAHPM Seeking Editorial Board Members
For Journal of Pain and Symptom Management

Four associate editors are being recruited for the Journal of Pain and Symptom Management (JPSM). JPSM is a highly respected forum for promoting clinical science and best practice in palliative care and meet the needs of an expanding and heterogeneous AAHPM membership.

Associate Editors will report to Editor-in-Chief David Casarett and work collaboratively with him and the Managing Editor, David Newcombe, to foster integration of expanded palliative care content, and specific content relevant to AAHPM, within JPSM.

Responsibilities include:

- Solicitation of specific content, including reviews, recurring material, or supplements.
- Overseeing the Journal’s manuscripts related to Non-Oncology Clinical Care, Q1 Section, Statistics and Social work.
- Serving as point persons for revised review processes for peer review, including selection of reviewers, coordination of reviews, and decision-making.
- Encouraging potential authors to contribute to the journal – through submission of research, development of reviews and other invited pieces.

This role requires strong writing skills and the ability to summarize information in a succinct, practical manner.

How to Apply
Applicants must have an active AAHPM membership. Interested members must submit a letter describing their interest for the section desired; (applicants may apply for multiple roles), related experience, and an up-to-date CV through the application system. Deadline for initial application and consideration is Tuesday, June 25, 2024. Finalists for JPSM will be selected by EIC, Dr. Casarett supported by associate editors, David Hui and Solomon Liao. All applicants will be notified by July.